

Professor Zoltan Endre graduated with first class honours in Medicine and Science and a PhD from Sydney University. He trained as a Nephrologist at Prince Henry Hospital in Sydney and completed post-doctoral studies as Nuffield Medical Fellow in Oxford. He has held Nephrology and Professorial appointments in Brisbane-Australia, Christchurch-New Zealand and Sydney-Australia. His clinical and research interests are in acute and chronic kidney disease. He is a leader in kidney biomarker research and led the first intervention trial using urinary biomarkers to triage to treatment in critical care patients. His laboratory currently analyses biomarkers of kidney disease for studies in Australia, New Zealand, Singapore and Sri Lanka. He is on many journal editorial boards including Kidney International and is Deputy Editor-in-Chief of the Internal Medicine Journal. He is Head of Nephrology at the Prince of Wales Hospital and Clinical School of the University of New South Wales.